IRISH WHISKEY HISTORY

The history of whiskey and poitín in Ireland can be traced back over a millennium, with monks believed to have brought the art of distillation to Ireland during the Middle Ages. The word “whiskey” itself is derived from the Gaelic term “uisce beatha,” meaning “water of life.” Before the whiskey industry established itself, an illicit spirit known as poitín emerged.

Irish whiskey distilling once stood as a dominant force in the global spirits landscape, renowned for its exceptional quality. At the height of the Irish whiskey industry, the late 19th century and early 20th century, there were over 100 (legal...) distilleries operating throughout Ireland. Irish whiskey enjoyed widespread popularity, with distilleries flourishing across the country and exporting their products to markets around the world. Dublin was home to 37 distilleries alone, making it one of the key centres of whiskey production in Ireland. Sales records show that Irish whiskey outsold Scottish whisky in Scotland.

The invention of the column still, attributed to former excise man Aeneas Coffey in the 1830s, had a profound and transformative impact on distilling practices not only in Ireland but in Scotland, too. The innovation not only increased production capacity but also yielded a lighter neutral spirit, which became the foundation for blended whiskies. Cheap grain whiskey had landed. Irish distillers rejected grain whiskey, preferring the robust flavours achieved in pot still production. In 1879 the four major Dublin distillers wrote a book titled ‘Truth’s About Whisky’ warning that grain whiskey is merely “Pure alcohol and water, or nearly so, without distinctive flavour or quality, and without capacity for improvement.” Despite their objections, column distillation was adopted by many Irish distilleries. Blended whiskey transformed the preferences of whiskey drinkers.

The industry’s downfall began shortly after the 20th century. Factors such as the Irish War of Independence (1919-21) and Prohibition (1920-33) in the United States, war in Europe and global economic instability disrupted international markets and created an unfavourable environment for Irish whiskey exports.

By the mid-1960s most distilleries had closed operations, and the remaining faced economic difficulties. In 1966 a decision was made by three major distilleries, John Power & Son, John Jameson & Son, and Cork Distilleries Company to consolidate production at a single distillery, the Midleton Distillery in County Cork. This consolidation aimed to streamline operations, reduce costs, and ensure the survival of Irish whiskey production. Irish Distillers was formed. This merger brought together globally recognised brands like Jameson, Powers, Redbreast and Paddy under one corporate entity.

Today there are over 40 operating distilleries in Ireland, and whilst a far cry from its distilling heyday, it’s an explosive return for the industry. A new generation of distillers are reviving old styles of whiskey by emulating historical mashbills using oats, rye, and wheat alongside barley.

POT STILL WHISKEY - AN IRISH SPIRIT

Ireland produces a unique style of whiskey called pot still. Pot still whiskey is an historically significant style of whiskey. Unlike single malt whiskey, which is made exclusively from malted barley, pot still often whiskey combines both malted and unmalted barley in its mash bill.

In 1785 the ruling British enforced the Malt Tax to raise cash for the many wars they were involved in. The tax made producing whiskey solely from malted barley prohibitively expensive. To circumvent these costs, Irish distillers began using a mix of malted and unmalted barley. The addition of unmalted barley to the mash introduced a unique spiceiness and oiliness to the distillate, contributing to the signature mouthfeel of pot still whiskey. Whilst the use of cereal grains other than barley was common before the tax, its introduction provided a catalyst to distillers to embrace mixed mash bills.

It’s worth noting that whilst triple distillation is a defining characteristic of many Irish whiskeys, it is not a requirement. The triple distillation process remains an important part of the identity of many traditional Irish whiskey brands.

POITIN, POTCHEEN, POTEEN

Poitín, Potcheen or Poteen, is a traditional Irish spirit with a varied and dramatic history. Poitín has a heritage that predates recorded history, making it one of the world’s oldest distilled beverages. The origins of Poitín can be traced back to medieval monasteries where monks first experimented with distilling grains and fruits. Over the centuries, Poitín evolved from a clandestine, homemade spirit brewed in small copper pot stills, to a symbol of Irish rebellion against British rule. Poitín distillation was banned in the 17th century, yet it remained an essential part of Irish culture, heritage and rural commerce. Since its legalisation in 1997, Poitín has experienced a renaissance, now produced legally with a focus on preserving its traditional character.

PARLIMENT WHISKEY

Parliment Whiskey was the term given to officially licensed producers. Our whiskey list is organised into the historic Irish provinces, comprised of Ulster, Leinster, Connacht and Munster, which have been significant regions in Ireland for centuries, each with their own distinct culture and heritage. These provinces played crucial roles in shaping Irish history and identity, once ruled by powerful regional kings who fought for power and influence on the island of Ireland.

OLD & RARE

Throughout the menu are old and rare whiskeys. Some of these bottles come from lost distilleries. Some from very limited casks or discontinued expressions – once they’re gone, that’s it! A chance to try whiskeys rarely seen for sale.

SHOP

Born out of necessity during lockdown 1, the team at The Umbrella Project – proprietors of The Sun Tavern, Discount Suit Company and Umbrella London went from strength to strength keeping the East End and beyond sufficiently lubricated with bottled cocktails, cocktail kits, natural wines, small producer spirits and of course, Irish Whiskey. Due to its success we now have a Bricks and Mortar store, The Umbrella Workshop.

Located on Boundary Street, E2. This central Shoreditch location serves as a hub for Team Umbrella. Not only does it serve as a shop, but also a cocktail bar and tasting room for everything on sale in store.

Situated in the old atelier workshops built in 1895, The Umbrella Project has sensitively restored the space to its original feel providing a unique setting for shopping and drinking all things booze.

Shop online at The Umbrella Project by scanning the QR code below.

Opening times:

Online: 24/7

Bricks and Mortar: Midday until 10pm daily
